The 2014 SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo is Here

The 2014 SC AgriBiz & Farm Expo is finally here. More than 100 exhibitors are taking part in the trade show at the Florence Civic Center January 16-17. The latest agricultural technology is also on display and there are numerous education opportunities.

The Expo is highlighting the importance of farm safety with grain bin rescue demonstrations and training. Commissioner Hugh Weathers will participate in the first rescue demo Jan. 16 at 12:30 p.m., when experts rescue him from a partially filled grain bin. Additional demonstrations are set for Jan. 17 at 9:30 a.m. and 11:30 a.m.

All demos will happen in the Expo's outdoor exhibit area at the Florence Civic Center, 3300 West Radio Drive, Florence, 29501.

Look for a complete wrap up of the Expo in the next addition of the Market Bulletin along with pictures from the second annual event.

Ag Works – Farm Eye for the City Guy

In November, Farm City folks in Lexington County partnered with WACH Fox 57 to celebrate Farm-City Week with a unique feature called Ag Works – Farm Eye for the City Guy. The show was so successful that the partnership has expanded into a year-long effort.

To celebrate the work of farmers in South Carolina, every month throughout the year City Guy Tyler Ryan, host of Tyler's Travels, is visiting a different farm and participating in hands-on day-to-day operations. Next fall, he will be the guest speaker at the Lexington County Farm City Banquet telling about his experiences working on the farms.

The goal of Ag Works is to show and acknowledge the incredible challenges farmers face. They work from dawn to dusk, often into the night, in all kinds of inclement weather.

The first job featured in Ag Works was harvesting cotton on the Delano Kneece Farm in Pelion. Luther Kneece and his cousin, Ricky, and their families grow corn, cotton and peanuts and raise cattle. Luther gave Tyler an up-close-and-personal look at cotton from field to fabric.

Inside the 6-row self-propelled cotton picker, the City Guy learned that farmers depend on things like the weather that they can't control, but they also depend on their skills and technology. For instance, the cotton picker must remain on the rows within three inches or the cotton could get bogged down in the headers. That could be difficult when you're parading a 50,000 pound machine down six rows of cotton – unless you have the right electronics on board.

"If you have 400 acres of cotton to pick, your hands would get mighty sore," noted Tyler, "if you didn't have technology like GPS and the skills to use that technology."

Tyler also was able to climb on board a module builder. The big rig compacts 20,000 pounds of cotton into modules which wait covered beside the fields until they can be transported to the gin. At the gin, the cottonseed is removed from the fiber to be used for livestock feed and oil. Then, the cotton fiber is stored in a warehouse and later shipped to the end user.

"We don't stop until the sun goes down – Monday through Saturday," said Luther. "We work every day except Sunday. Farmers grow the food . . . they grow the fiber," he said. "But it's something we enjoy doing."

"Farming is not really a job. It's a way of life!" said Loni Rikard, chair of Lexington County Farm City Programs and owner of Rocky Wells Agri-Services. "Today, generations are far more removed from the farm, so it's more important than ever to bring awareness to the amount of work that goes into producing food, fiber, and fuel."

"Lexington County is a great example of how farm and city work together in South Carolina," she added. "This is an urbanized area, but it's also one of the top ag producing counties in the state. With all the people in the world, farmers have to produce more with less and they do that through technology. It's a very high-tech process."

No one embodies "work" more than the farmer. Farmers are real people with a real work ethic. Because of their determination and strong work ethic, they provide food and other raw materials for 4.7 million South Carolinians and 300 million Americans.

As the temperatures drop, keep in mind our farmers who are struggling to keep crops from freezing and their animals fed and sheltered. No matter how bad the weather, there are no cancellations when it comes to farming.

Throughout the year, join Tyler Ryan in his travels to collard, cattle, chicken, peach, and other farms and see just how Ag Works for you. Don't miss more upcoming visits to local farms with Tyler on Good Day Columbia as the city guy gets a farming eye. Visit <http://www.lexingtoncountyfarmcity.org> for more information and upcoming features.

Let's Celebrate the Year of the Horse

According to the Chinese calendar, 2014 is The Year of the Horse. I have always wondered how that decision was made. Regardless of that detail, horses generate a substantial amount of money for agribusiness in ways that most people don't realize, which contributes significantly to our state's economy. Now this is plenty reason to celebrate!

Our state's horse industry is booming. With horses located in every county, the economic impact is huge. Horse owners invest in real estate—not just farm land, but in houses where they can own or ride horses safely. They pay property taxes and insurance, they install fencing, build barns, erect storage buildings, put down wells, run water lines, and they buy things—lots of things for their horses.

The reason you don't see many horses around urban areas is because horse owners, breeders and trainers need large amounts of land, which is usually less expensive in rural areas. It's also safer and quieter. As soon as horse owners have a place for their animals to live, they want a vehicle to go with their lifestyle. The purchase of a truck or SUV is soon followed by a horse trailer, which means more money spent for gasoline and diesel fuel.

Any horse owner will tell you that one horse often leads to another, so the family can get involved. People buy saddles, tack, clothes, boots, and an endless amount of equipment.

Stir Fried Greens with Chicken & Pecans

- 1 pound collard or turnip greens
- 2 chicken bouillon cubes
- 4 chicken thighs, boned
- 3 tablespoons Canola oil
- 2 tablespoons hot sauce
- 1/2 cup chopped pecans, toasted

Wash, stem, and slice greens. Place greens in large pot of boiling water; add bouillon cubes. Boil 5 minutes; drain. Cut chicken into 1-inch pieces. Heat oil in large skillet and add chicken. Toss over medium heat for 3 to 5 minutes until nearly done. Add greens and hot sauce. Toss until greens are heated through and coated with chicken juices. Just before serving, sprinkle toasted pecans over chicken and greens. Yields 4 servings.

And I can tell you from personal experience that maintenance for a horse, which includes regular hoof care and vet calls, adds up in a hurry.

Not only do horse owners spend money on their animals, but the horse industry supports a number of jobs. Farmers grow hay, oats and corn which are used for feed, and they also provide land for pasture. Trainers, riding instructors, grooms, day laborers, equine veterinarians, farriers, and feed stores are all dependent on horses for their jobs.

Add in riding lessons for the kids, and trail rides for the adults. Our state parks with equestrian facilities see families haul in every weekend to enjoy nature. Then these folks invest in camping equipment. Horse trailers with living quarters—some of them have showers, full kitchens and even fireplaces!--are becoming more and more common.

Another little-known facet of the horse business in South Carolina is our racehorses. In addition to the horse centers of Aiken, Camden, and Landrum, we have a number of training tracks in small towns like Elloree, St. Matthews, Timmonsville, Kingstree and Holly Hill. These dedicated trainers provide jobs in rural areas where opportunities for employment are scarce. They generally pay better than average wages.

Speaking of racehorses, I watched the movie ‘Secretariat’ for the first time recently flying home from a trip. I recommend this true story movie highly.

Horses can be a year-round business, pleasure, and hobby. From racehorses to polo, foxhunting to trail riding, endurance competition to carriage driving, horses have a place in our hearts—and in our pocketbooks. Horses are a thriving commodity, and they’re just plain good agribusiness.

So Happy New Year and Happy Horse Year.

Smokin’ Ed’s Carolina Reaper is the Hottest Pepper in the World

Guinness World Record makes it official, CBS picks up the news

When you have a passion for something, it shows. But when your passion is recognized by the world, you know you’re special. Ed Currie’s passion for hot peppers has led him to a place in Guinness World Records™ and to a recent appearance on CBS This Morning. Smokin’ Ed’s Carolina Reaper ® is officially the world’s hottest chili pepper.

Hot sauce production is one of America’s fastest-growing industries, and Smokin’ Ed is one of the reasons. His Puckerbutt Pepper Company in Fort Mill specializes in hot stuff—really, really hot stuff.

The Smokin Ed’s Carolina Reaper ® is now at the top of the super-hot chili peppers. With peak levels of more than 2.2 million SHU (Scoville Heat Units), the Reaper is 300 times hotter than a jalapeno. But the truth is, the superhot pepper business is on fire. One market research firm, IBIS World, found that that hot stuff really is hot stuff.

In the last few years, the average American has sought to add more spice to his meal, and the food industry has obliged. From 2010 to 2012, the mention of the word "spicy" on fast food menus was up nearly 15 percent, according to food industry consulting firm Technomic.

Salsa has pushed past ketchup as the nation’s top-selling condiment. Technomic’s data reflects that 2013 was the first year ever that a majority of Americans say they prefer hot or spicy sauces.

All this data is music to the ears of Ed Currie, an unrelenting grower of pepper pain and father of the Smokin Ed’s Carolina Reaper ®. Currie harvests about 17 million peppers a year in South Carolina. "I pretty much work on peppers all the time," he said.

He has spent about $12,000 to get the Guinness Book of Records to call his pepper the hottest. One of the key components was evidence from a lab at Winthrop University, where chemist Cliff Calloway has been testing exactly how hot the peppers are. The method scientifically measures heat in parts per million.

Calloway says that Currie’s pepper tests out to be the hottest in the world, having the chemical composition similar to pepper spray. And people actually eat them!

Currie recently achieved national recognition through his Dec. 28 appearance on CBS This Morning, “They called and wanted to have me live on the morning show,” he said. “They flew me to New York on Friday and home again on Saturday.”

There he explained to hosts Anthony Mason and Vinita Nair how the hottest pepper on record became a reality.

“I use a cross-breeding technique from India that’s about 3000 years old,” he said. By pollinating the seeds and continuing to breed for more and more heat, he finally got the plant he was looking for. It took about eight years—hardly an overnight success.

Currie takes pride in the fact that the pepper is not just hot, but it also tastes good. “It has a sweet taste before the heat hits,” he said. He uses the Smokin Ed’s Carolina Reaper ® in a variety of products from dipping sauce to jellies. After tasting it, CBS host Anthony Nair asked, “Does it come with a fire hose?”

Since his Guinness World Record, the news media has discovered Currie and his hot peppers. “I’m getting nationwide press, but none at home,” he said, despite the fact that he travels all over the country promoting South Carolina at chili festivals. In the next month he will be going to the Zest Fest in Dallas, Texas, the Chili Pepper Institute at the University of New Mexico, the North Market in Columbus, Ohio, the Fiery Foods Festival in Albuquerque, NM, and the New York City Hot Sauce Expo. He typically attends two to four festivals a month.

“I have SC Certified on everything, and I constantly talk about our state,” he said, adding that his foods are all natural, great-tasting, and contain no extracts.

With names like I Dare You Stupit, Purgatory, and Edible Lava, some of the sauces perhaps should come with warning labels. But people love them. “We are in stores all across the country,” Currie said. “And I’m hoping to open a production facility here in Fort Mill. It’s about jobs. I’ll do anything to help our state.”

Puckerbutt Pepper Co. in Fort Mill sells high quality smokin’ hot mashes, sauces, fresh peppers, seeds and other spicy merchandise at stores throughout the country and from its website, www.puckerbuttpeppercompany.com.

Carolina Reapers are a crossbreed made by farmer Ed Currie at The Puckerbutt Pepper Company in Rock Hill. These peppers are 300 times hotter than a jalapeno. Now that’s hot!

Horse Expo Offers Entertainment and Information

Horses, horses, and more horses! The SC Horsemen’s Council annual Horse Expo on Feb. 8 is filled with horse activities geared to please everyone from backyard riders to professionals to children.

Beginning at 10 a.m. at the S.C. Equine Park in Camden, the Expo has several dynamic presentations scheduled. A horse health pavilion, children’s activities, a tag sale, silent auction and many top vendors are also featured.

For thrills and excitement, knights from Medieval Times in Myrtle Beach will bring to life the pageantry and skills of long-ago knights on horseback. A group of trick riders will fascinate the crowd, while techniques of emergency horse rescue will offer much-needed information for horse owners. The elegant sport of carriage driving will also be featured. Equine veterinarians will be sharing their knowledge at the health pavilion, with time for questions afterwards.

A Marsh Tacky gelding, which is being auctioned in a special fund-raiser, will be on site, and raffle tickets will be available. A variety of breeds will demonstrate their specialties under saddle and in harness.

“We are very excited to offer a special competition for youth,” said chairman Wanda Wood. “We want to introduce non-riders to the wonderful world of horses in a fun-filled day. We also have top professionals who will share their knowledge with riders and horse lovers on many levels.”

The ever-popular Vendor Row will be open all day. A general membership meeting of the SC Horsemen’s Council and election of officers will be held at 4:30 p.m.

Admission is $10 with special rates for SC Horse Council members, and memberships are available on site. For more information about the Expo go to www.schorsemencouncil.org or call Wanda Wood at 803-230-8810.

The SC Equine Park is located at Exit 101 off I-20 between Columbia and Florence.

Sheep and Goat Seminar Offers Tour & Training

An afternoon session for sheep and goat owners will be held Feb. 2 from 2-5 p.m. in Mauldin. In addition to a session titled “Smart Deworming” with field training, a biosecurity overview and health care will be covered. A flock tour and demonstrations on hoof trimming and injections will be offered.

Dr. Patty Scharko, Clemson LPH Extension field veterinarian, and Dr. Derek Wessinger of Cleveland Park Animal Hospital will be the speakers.

The $30 fee covers handouts and refreshments. To register, send check to Whispering Pines, 206 Adams Mill Road, Mauldin, SC 29662. For more information, contact Debbie Webster, SC Sheep Industries Association regional director, at 864-982-5331.

SC Cattlemen Association to Meet March 1

The SC Cattlemen’s Association annual meeting will be held March 1 at the SC State Farmers Market in West Columbia. The focus is on forage this year, with talks on grazing in grass management, better use of soil tests, soil fertility and management. Updates will be given on the beef cattle assessment program and legislative matters pertaining to the industry.

The meeting will include a midday awards luncheon, a silent auction, and youth scholarships. Awards will be given for Cattleman of the Year, Education and Industry Service of the Year, Environmental Stewardship, and Association of the Year.

Applications for youth scholarships and nominations for Awards of Excellence are due by Feb. 7. Go to www.sccattle.org for details.

Sponsorships for the meeting are $150 each, and exhibitors may reserve a booth and two registrations for $275. Individual registration is $35 per member and $15 for spouses. Lunch is included.

The Market Bulletin is a Great Gift Idea!
